IDEX Doll and Teddy Bear Show in Las Vegas and the REBORN First Convention June 30 - July 2, 2006

by Genevieve Montcombreaux

Wow, what a show! With 609 booths, many double and triple size, plus a score of unnumbered tables, it was impossible not to be impressed by the first annual IDEX Doll and Teddy Bear Show, held in Las Vegas' glittering Rio Hotel and Casino.

One of the most striking features was the show's presentation. Not a shipping carton in sight under the tables, no messy displays, no doll crowding out its neighbor. The show was esthetically pleasing and a fabulous visual treat.

Another feature that struck me was the quality of the dolls and bears on display. They were simply amazing. I didn't necessarily fall in love with every individual piece or every artist's style, but I recognized the excellence in the craft and artistry.

Visitors to the First IDEX Reborn Competition, hosted by Doll Reader, were asked to vote for their favorite baby doll for the public's choice award.

Just a second! Perhaps not everyone is familiar with the term "reborn baby doll". Let me explain. With the recent advent of soft vinyl and silicone dolls, doll companies have begun to make baby play dolls so soft to the touch and so realistic that they appear lifelike. Doll makers, both veteran and aspiring, were quick to seize the new medium. They took the play dolls, stripped them of the factory paint and wigs and repainted them. They then micro-root the heads with mohair or human hair. With wonderful creativeness they dress the doll, so that passers-by do a double take when they see a reborn baby in somebody's arms.

I had a ball when traveling home from the convention with my newly-acquired baby doll peeping out of a shoulder bag. An airline ticket attendant even asked if I needed an infant seat! Good-natured laughter follows when people realize it's a doll not a real baby. Doll companies have been quick to produce kits of raw vinyl heads and limbs. Artist-sculptors are busy producing new baby faces. Yet this remarkable revolution in the doll-making world is only a couple of years old.

The high standard in quality and variety of the some thirty Reborn Baby Dolls entered in the competition made it very hard to decide on a winner. Seven hundred votes were cast and, as is often the case in these instances, the public's choice was different from the judges' choice.

The DOTY and TOBY awards were handed out, Saturday, July 1, 2006. Doll Reader and Teddy Bears and Friends, in conjunction with IDEX, sponsored a silent auction and a raffle basket to raise money for the Make a Wish Foundation (Nevada). The drive raised $US 7,000. Jeffrey Wolk, CEO of the two magazines, stepped forward to donate $US 3,000 – making a round figure of $US 10,000. Doll companies and many individual artists donated wonderful dolls for the auction. The most moving moment was the viewing of a video made a few years before, showing Make a Wish Foundation children receiving their wish. The chilling realization that those children are no longer with us brought many in the audience to tears.

The entire convention was a wonderful experience, with so many dolls to admire and fall in love with! Everyone involved in putting on the show, from the security staff to the artists and the CEOs of doll companies, was friendly. Smiles were the order of the day.

Will I be there next year? What do you think?

Quirky Guy by Pamela Hastings pmoonlight@ulster.net

This Quirky Guy is quick and easy, but can be finished and embellished in all kinds of ways. Use a photo transfer on the face, needle modeling, embroidery or button eyes. The body can be dyed, pieced, stamped or collaged. Add a 1/8" to 1/4" seam allowance and leave the ends of the arms and legs open, also the top of the head. Things can be sticking out of the openings. Join the limbs to the body with buttons, so he can sit or put a hanging loop on the back of the head. The possibilities are endless!

Enlarge pattern to whatever size you like.
